And, this week, he invited Jon Stewart to sit in the chair behind the desk, with an idea in mind for one of the first jokes of the segment. The story of Colbert's Late Show appearance goes beyond one of guest-hosting duties, though. After all, Stewart's on-air future is still up in the air: His longtime employer, Comedy Central, is known for tough negotiations and middling success with pay-for-access big names, and Stewart, who left the cable network this spring for his eponymous, commercial-free online platform, has been a little quieter lately. So, a little chemistry between him and Colbert on The Late Show, a place he's appeared on several times in the past, would be helpful — and a neat bit of meta-commentary on his own less-than-cable future. "I would be delighted to welcome Jon Stewart to the show," Colbert said during the final minutes of his Late Show monologue, as CBS cameras started 82157476af
